The original Redlands tracts, consisting of some 9350 acres, were granted to John Carter, secretary of the Colony and eldest son of Robert Carter of Corotoman, in 1730 and 1735. The property took its name from the red clay soil so prevalent in that part of Albemarle County. The present mansion at Redlands was begun circa 1798 for Robert Carter, grandson of John Carter, around the time of his marriage to Mary Eliza Coles of neighboring Enniscorthy. Unfortunately the architect (if any) is unknown, but the main part of the construction was supervised by the builder Martin Thacker. The house was not completed until 1808, just one year before Carter's death. In 1830, Carter's wife divided the plantation among her four sons with the residence and surrounding lands going to the youngest son Robert. Ownership of the house and some 1200 acres remains with Robert Carter's descendants today.

The Redlands house stands as one of the most notable Federal mansions in Piedmont Virginia. It is distinguished not only by its excellent proportions, but by the quality of its construction and the sophistication of its interiors. Architecturally the house is interesting as its general form reflects the style of the Tidewater Georgian mansions of some fifty years earlier, while its interior decoration is in the height of contemporary fashion. Redlands contains a remarkable assemblage of portraits and furniture acquired by the Carter family over the past century.

As with the Carter plantations of northern Virginia, Redlands exemplifies the re-establishment of many of Virginia's distinguished colonial families in the late-eighteenth century.
